ARTIST BIO:

Pony Pants is not a softy band. The Brothers Ellis play complex, driving guitar riffs over smart, sweaty drum machine tracks. Emily J.K. sings about making out, politics, fun times, hard times, and the fantasy world they wish they lived in. Everyone dances around. In this post modern age of hybrids, blends, overlaps and no-names, how to label or describe this music? As a start, Pony Pants hinges on the anarcho/indiepunk DIY/dance-y/rowdy and spontaneous tip: a little sass, like Cyndi Lauper with a dose of metal, like the Fucking Champs, and a whole lot of party with a fierce, fearless edge.

OVERVIEW:

Till Death Do Us Party explodes out of the package with 8 tight, fresh tracks sure to shake up dance parties, boom boxes, car stereos and basement shows across the land. Full of hope, heat, and a sense of urgency, the songs offer a vision of the world where pleasure and politics are one in the same. In the universe of Pony Pants, radical bedroom romps, volatile social disobedience, and courageous utopian dreams occupy the same plane of resistance and deviance. Pony Pants has shared the stage with such acts as Parts & Labor, Veronica Lipgloss & the Evil Eyes, Hott Beat, nO things, Fur Cups For Teeth, Genghis Tron, Shellshag, and Rah Brahs.

PRESS QUOTES:

"Pony Pants are dancey as fuck, but their chaotic party jams are more exciting than all of today's paint-by-number dance-punk units combined."
- Philadelphia Weekly

"The dudes rawk and singer Emily J.K. commands the stage with righteous moxie. Their metal/electropunk mash-up is perfect for packing dance floors, but the West Philly trio's brand new Til Death Do Us Party crams all that sweaty goodness into a neat little take-home package."
- Philadelphia City Paper
