OVERVIEW

Water School is a prolifically talented band that expertly combines the diverse influences of Television and Gram Parsons into a poly-textural sound reminiscent of the likes of Neil Young, The Kinks, and Harry Nilsson on their album titled "Break Up With Water School". Comprised of boyhood friends Mike Gittings, Eric Hopkins, Chris Myers and Matt Scoggins, the members of this Baltimore 4-piece have all been plying their trade for nearly ten years. This debut album charts their progression into accomplished musicians, practiced songwriters, and an evocative core of musical artists.

Their approach to crafting memorable songs is characterized by the interwoven fabrics of the band. Each musical instrument contributes a distinct voicing, but exists more to elaborate on the blend of flavors that creates the rich alt-country soundscape of the band. Adding to the vibrant tonality are emotional and often-poetic narratives that expose the twist and turns of lost loves, now distant friendships, and mercurial personal demons. Still, even the competing tensions of vocal passion and melodic introspection find partial resolution in lush choruses and rich harmonics, a testament to their talent and cohesiveness.

Challenging the boundaries of multi-genre influences and exploring new territories for intelligent rock, Water School's "Break Up With Water School" CD documents a great band charting new musical territory with complex yet accessible and readily likeable songs.
